With the election only a fortnight off the situation is so open that all sorts of freak bets are being made, and the odds are fluctuating daily. The Conservatives remain hopeful of receiving a clear majority, but they are showing no signs of overconfidence. Despite their rout in the municipal elections, which occurred chiefly because the rate payers feared the program of a Labor regime, leaders of the Labor party say that their prospects in the general election remain exceedingly good.

The tone of the Premier's speech to the women at Drury Lane Theater was distinctly impressive. He took the gloves off and gave his audience a real treat in the way of an exhibition of political pugilism. From the outset he had his audience with him, for he promised to approach all questions affecting women "not only with an open but with a sympathetic mind." Instead of regretting his previous statement that he didn't know precisely where he was, the Premier said that as (Continued on page six)

The recent acquisition of the "Thunderer" from the Northcliffe estate by John Walter and Major John Jacob Astor gave rise to rumors that a change was coming in the editorship. The plan for this change is now said to have been accelerated through the appearance in "The Times" this morning of an editorial violently attacking the government's policy in regard to control of the commission on German disarmament and referring to the projected change in the form of control in terms which this evening are officially styled inaccurate.
